Police Chiefs Award Prestigious Joe Molloy Award to Irvine Police Chief Dave Maggard

The California Police Chiefs Association awarded its most prestigious award, the Joe Molloy Award, to Irvine Police Chief Dave Maggard on February 26th at the Installation Banquet in Monterey during their 37th Annual Training Symposium. CPCA Outgoing President Kim Raney, Chief of the Covina Police Department, presented Chief Maggard with the award for his dedication and service to law enforcement and to the California Police Chiefs Association. This award embodies the characteristics represented by the late Chief Joe Molloy of Anaheim; professionalism, leadership, energy, and commitment to the mission of the Association.

Chief Raney said the selection of Chief Dave Maggard to receive this award was an easy one to make. "Chief Maggard has been a forward thinking leader in his community and for the association and committed to enhancing the profession. He brought his passion for improving the image of law enforcement to life for Cal Chiefs and the profession and delivered much in the way of communication innovation to our association."

"Additionally," emphasized Chief Raney, "Chief Maggard's impact on our association has been powerful, from the time he was first appointed to the board in 2008 and continuing through his presidency from 2011-2012. As President, Chief Maggard fought tirelessly for financial resources for local law enforcement to address impacts from public safety realignment and made sure that Cal Chiefs' voice was heard."

"Chief Maggard is highly respected within the law enforcement community, and I was honored to present him with the award for the work he has done for Cal Chiefs, for law enforcement, and for public safety."

The California Police Chiefs Association represents the state's municipal police chiefs whose agencies protect over 78 percent of the citizens of California.
